

Twilli's Writing Process

FOR ALL THE THINGS

Topic Selection

What do you want to write about? This the time to narrow your topic and determine your angle after you brainstorm.

Writing & Editing

Free write, journal, or do whatever you can do on paper. Edit and revise edit and revise. Make sure you have checked the spelling of proper nouns, and double check for grammar and flow Stay true to your voice..

Take a Break, Try Again

Whoo hoo! When it feels like you're done, you're not! Read it again, share it with wise counsel, double check your facts, read it as if you are a member of your audience. Talk to your avatar.

Research

It's not enough to write about a topic just because you have something to say. Once you have the topic, read about it, Check viable internet sources, interview others, and make sure you know what you're talking about and you have refined your main point. .

The Visual Elements

Depending on what you're writing, you may need visual elements to enhance your work. Consider adding some photos and other types of graphics to help your reader see what you're saying..
